Key messages (English)

The unit for Social Welfare Services in the Division for Health Services at the Norwegian Institute for Public Health was commissioned by The Norwegian Directorate for Children, Youth and Family Affairs to identify empirical research on the effect of and experiences of interventions for young people exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence.

Methods

We conducted a systematic literature search of relevant databases. In September 2017, an Information Retrieval Specialist designed and conducted the systematic search. Two researchers screened all titles and abstracts to identify references that met pre-defined inclusion criteria.

Results

We did not identify any empirical research on the effect of or experiences of interventions for young people who have been exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence.

There is a clear need for research on the effect of, and experiences with interventions for young people who have been exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence.

Effect of, and experiences with interventions for young people exposed to forced marriage or honour-related violence: A systematic literature search with sorting

Systematic literature search with sorting

A systematic literature search with sorting is the result of a search for relevant literature according to a specific search strategy. The references resulting from the search are then grouped and presented with their abstracts.

Hovedbudskap (Norsk)

Seksjon for velferdstjenester i område for helsetjenester i Folkehelseinstituttet fikk i oppdrag av Barne-, ungdoms- og familiedirektoratet å identifisere forskning om effekt av og erfaring med tiltak for unge som er blitt utsatt for tvangsekteskap eller æresrelatert vold.

Metoder

Vi utførte et systematisk litteratursøk i relevante databaser. En forskningsbibliotekar utviklet og gjennomførte søket i september 2017. To forskere gikk uavhengig av hverandre gjennom identifiserte titler og sammendrag og vurderte relevans i forhold til inklusjonskriteriene.

Resultater

Vi identifiserte ingen empiriske studier som så på effekt av eller erfaringer med tiltak for unge som er blitt utsatt for tvangsekteskap eller æresrelatert vold.

Det er behov for studier om effekt av og erfaringer med tiltak for unge som er blitt utsatt for tvangsekteskap eller æresrelatert vold.

Preface

The Unit for Social Research in the Division for Health Services at The Norwegian Institute of Public Health was commissioned in 2017 to conduct a systematic search of the literature to identify primary research studies on the effect of, or experiences with interventions for young people exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence.

We have searched systematically for relevant literature, with the aim of identifying studies that meet pre-defined inclusion criteria and sorting them according to study, population and intervention characteristics.

The project group consisted of:

- Heather M Munthe-Kaas, Researcher, Norwegian Institute of Public Health
- Nikita Baiju, Student, University of Tromsø
- Lien Nguyen, Information Retrieval Specialist, Norwegian Institute of Public Health

Introduction

Objective

The aim of this project is to identify and sort relevant studies that examine the effect of, and experiences with interventions given to young people who have been exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence.

Background

Honour-based violence

Honour-based violence is “... carried out as a commission from the extended family, to restore honour after the family has been dishonoured. As a rule, the basic cause is a rumour that any female family member has behaved in an immoral way” (Unni Wikan, as cited in Baobaid and Hamed 2010, p. 25; (1)).” This can include murder, however, much more commonly, honour-based violence involves punishments such as restrictions on freedom, verbal violence, and physical abuse (2).

Forced marriage

Forced marriage is a form of intimate partner violence. It is a serious breach of Norwegian law and basic human rights (3). The Norwegian Directorate for Children, Youth and Family Affairs (Bufdir) further specifies that force can include use of violence, confinement or psychological pressure (4).

In 2016, 41 cases around Norway were reported to minority counsellors regarding fear of, or actual, forced marriage (5). In 2015, the Competence Team Against Forced Marriage and Female Genital Mutilation in Bufdir advised on 399 cases, of which 39% were regarding fear of, or actual, forced marriage (6). In the same year, 39 young people were placed in shelters under the national housing and support plan for young people exposed to forced marriage and honour-based violence (6).

It is unclear how many cases of honour-based violence are reported in Norway each year, however, approximately 5000 women worldwide were killed in acts of honour in 2000. This number is assumed to be much larger in reality since very often honour-based crimes are reported as suicide or missing persons (7).

Why is this systematic search with sorting of references important?

Young people exposed to honour-related violence and forced marriage can have long-term physical and mental health challenges (8). Bufdir is responsible for developing and managing services to support young people exposed to forced marriage and honour-based violence. Current services include housing and support, crisis centres and family welfare services. In order to further develop these services, the Directorate requires evidence on which to base policy and practice decisions.

Methods

We searched systematically in relevant databases for empirical studies that met predefined inclusion criteria (described below).

Inclusion criteria

We used the following inclusion criteria to identify primary research on the effect of, or experience with interventions for young people who have been exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence.

Population:	Young people (under 30 years old) who are, or are at risk for becoming, exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence. To be included, participants must be at individual risk for forced marriage/honour-based violence, and not only be part of a population group that is considered at risk for forced marriage or honour-based violence.
Intervention:	Interventions given to the population described above. The intervention may target a wider population (domestic violence survivors/victims), however, for inclusion there must be explicitly one or more participants who fulfil the population domain criteria.
Comparison:	No comparison, usual service or another intervention aimed at the same population.
Outcomes:	No restrictions.
Language:	No restrictions.
Year:	No restrictions.
Country:	No restrictions.

For qualitative studies, we were open to including studies that reported any perspective, including the person being exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence, the family of that person, or the individuals responsible for providing the intervention.

Exclusion criteria

We did not include studies where the intervention targeted domestic violence survivors/victims without an explicit mention of the population of interest in the abstract/title. We did not include studies that examined interventions aimed at population groups considered to be at risk for forced marriage or honour-based violence (e.g. ethnic minority girls from countries where honour-based violence is common).

Search strategy

An Information Retrieval Specialist (LN) developed and conducted the systematic search for studies in databases. The search strategy was peer reviewed by another information retrieval specialist and the project lead (HMK). We searched in the following databases:

- PsycINFO
- Campbell Library
- Cochrane Library (incl. CENTRAL)
- PubMed
- Social Services Abstracts
- Sociological Abstracts
- CINAHL
- ISI Web of Science
- Epistemonikos
- SocIndex
- ASSIA

In addition, we searched for relevant literature in Google Scholar using the terms “honour-based violence” OR “honour-related violence” AND effect OR experience and “forced marriage” AND effect OR experience.

See Appendix 1 for a full description of the search strategy.

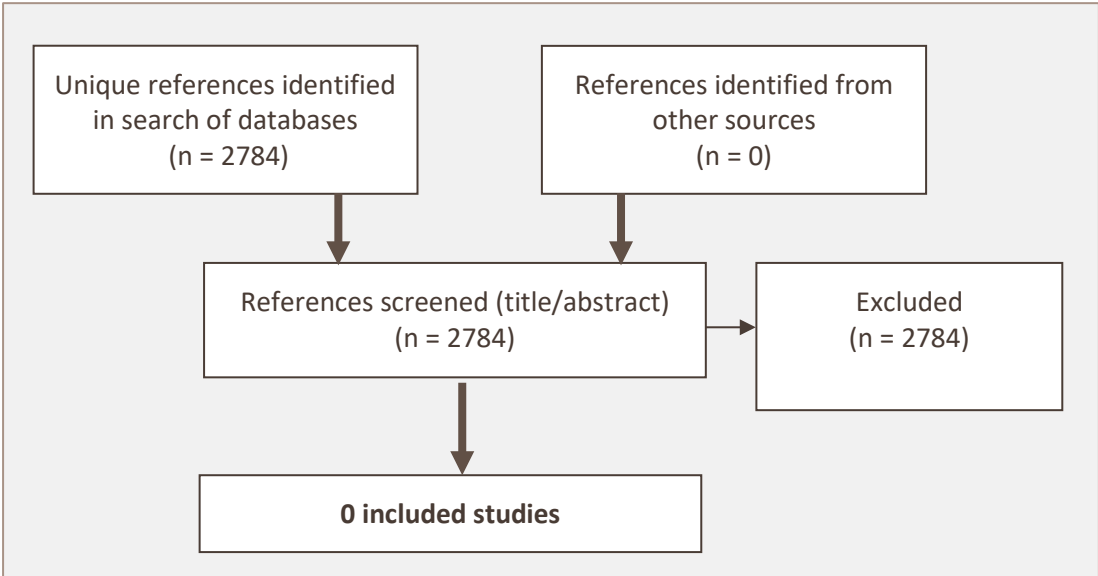

Study selection

Two researchers (HMK & NB) independently screened the titles and abstracts of identified references using the screening software Rayyan (<https://rayyan.qcri.org/reviews>). References were included if they meet the inclusion criteria described above. Where we were in disagreement about relevance, we discussed until we reached consensus.

Results

Results of the literature search

The systematic literature search and search of the grey literature resulted in 2784 potentially relevant references. We did not identify any references that fulfilled inclusion criteria based on screening of abstracts and titles (Figure 1).

Discussion

The results of this systematic search of the literature indicate that little or potentially no primary research has been done on the effect of, or people's experiences with interventions given to support victims/survivors of honour-based violence and/or forced marriage. There appears to be a substantial amount of research conducted on preventing honour-based violence and/or forced marriage, and some research on young people's experiences of these phenomena. One potential way to take this research question forward is to do a systematic review of qualitative research on young people's experiences of honour based violence and/or forced marriage in order to develop an idea of the type of support this group needs/wants. A primary study done by a Swedish student in 2013 aimed to explore just this idea by looking at "the actual needs and wants of subjected women and to understand their own perception of this type of violence and its underlying causes" (p.8 (9)). Synthesizing and summarizing such research could support the development of future interventions to support this population.

This systematic search of the literature clearly shows that there is a need for research on the effect of and experiences with interventions given to young people who have been exposed to forced marriage or honour-based violence.
